RURAL DOCTORS NETWORK

ABOUT RURAL DOCTORS NETWORK

Rural Doctors Network exists to advance rural medical and clinical practice. Tracing its origins to 1988 and the vision of family doctors based in rural New South Wales, today the Network supports a range of initiatives to grow the multidisciplinary rural health workforce and strengthen professional capability, including through grants, scholarships, recruitment, education, training, mentorship and career pathway support. Rural Doctors Network is a social enterprise of RDN - The Charity for Health Access.

The Network has a long history of working in partnership with Aboriginal people and organisations in New South Wales to improve health outcomes, and is committed to building collaborative relationships, respect and opportunities with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples throughout Australia.

Rural Doctors Network is the Australian Government's designated Rural Workforce Agency for health in New South Wales and also receives program funding from the NSW Ministry of Health.

PROGRAMS AND SERVICES

To support health access, Rural Doctors Network administers and provides a range of programs and services including:
